Karlson is very happy in his little house on the roof. In the evenings he sits on his front doorstep, smoking his pipe and looking at the stars. Of course you can see the stars much better from the roof than anywhere else in the house, so it really is rather strange that more people don't live on the rooftops.

Junior and Karlson (1968) - IMDb

Astrid Lindgren was known to come up with some of the most unconventional characters for children's fiction. Each of her characters is somehow or the other out of the ordinary mould. One of the prime examples here is that of Karlsson-on-the-roof, who is often denounced by critics as being a very bad role model for the kids.
